To increase the function of your websites, and make your website more user-friendly, you need to monitor the user experience and customer behavior. Google Analytics is a service that helps in doing this. Here are the most useful things you can do with Google Analytics There are four main perspectives of Google Analytics: Visitor: Provides you with valuable information about your website visitors. You can discover which are the most popular pages, the average time users spend on each page, the pages that received the highest and lowest attention, and other visitor-related information. Traffic: Allows you to see how many people accessed your website, by what paths, and from which IP address. With the help of this tool, you can define the most used paths and verify whether or not the traffic you get depends on whether or not your website is indexed on Google. Users: This perspective helps you analyze the performance of your website. You can learn whether or not people want to visit a specific page, if people stop reading when they get to a specific page, and more. Search: This tool is perfect for analyzing the best times and places to post new content on your website, as well as finding out which are the most visited content. How to Set Up Google Analytics: To set up Google Analytics, you need to do the following: -Sign up for an account on the Google Analytics website. -Go to your Analytics dashboard, and click the "Sign Up" button to confirm that you want to add a new profile. -Choose a profile name. This will be the name that users will see, so it is best to choose one that clearly shows who you are and that is not too generic
